

PAST TENSE

It was a nice feeling of freedom. My last lecture had finally ended, and I stepped outside into the late sunny afternoon. I made a beeline for my favorite boba tea shop. We greeted each other with the barista, and she started to make the tea that I'd ordered. I always took classic boba tea, and stayed true to my tastes that day. I didn't head home after receiving my order. Instead I turned towards the river and walked by it to enjoy the good weather. The tea's smell mixed with the scent of damp earth and greenery that had already started to bloom. I walked past couples laughing on benches and dogs with their owners, feeling as a quiet observer of St. Petersburg's bustling life. With every step, I felt better and better as I no longer had to think about formulas and deadlines and just enjoy this spring evening. My tea was getting colder and, soon, I finished it and discarded the cup into a bin. It stood by the river, and I stopped next to it for a moment to take a picture. Even though I'd been here many times, looking at the pink horizon with the sun slowly fading below the line, the view never stopped to amaze me.

PRESENT TENSE

It is a nice feeling of freedom. My last lecture has finally ended, and I step outside into the late sunny afternoon. I make a beeline for my favorite boba tea shop. We greet each other with the barista, and she starts to make the tea that I've ordered. I always take classic boba tea, and stay true to my tastes today. I don't head home after receiving my order. Instead I turn towards the river and walk by it to enjoy the good weather. The tea's smell mixes with the scent of damp earth and greenery that has already started to bloom. I walk past couples laughing on benches and dogs with their owners, feeling as a quiet observer of St. Petersburg's bustling life. With every step, I feel better and better as I no longer have to think about formulas and deadlines and just enjoy this spring evening. My tea is getting colder and, soon, I finish it and discard the cup into a bin. It stands by the river, and I stop next to it for a moment to take a picture. Even though I've been here many times, looking at the pink horizon with the sun slowly fading below the line, the view never stops to amaze me.

FUTURE TENSE

It will be a nice feeling of freedom. My last lecture will have finally ended, and I will step outside into the late sunny afternoon. I will make a beeline for my favorite boba tea shop. We will greet each other with the barista, and she will start to make the tea that I will have ordered. I will always take classic boba tea, and will stay true to my tastes that day. I will not head home after receiving my order. Instead I will turn towards the river and walk by it to enjoy the good weather. The tea's smell will mix with the scent of damp earth and greenery that will have already started to bloom. I will walk past couples laughing on benches and dogs with their owners, feeling as a quiet observer of St. Petersburg's bustling life. With every step, I will feel better and better as I will no longer have to think about formulas and deadlines and will just enjoy that spring evening. My tea will be getting colder and, soon, I will finish it and discard the cup into a bin. It will stand by the river, and I will stop next to it for a moment to take a picture. Even though I will have been there many times, looking at the pink horizon with the sun slowly fading below the line, the view will never stop to amaze me.